"Maganitis" is a new word coined by a French physician to describe the state of mind, similar to intoxication, produced in kleptomaniacs when they see the tempting display of seemingly unguarded articles in department stores. Dr. Dubousson thinks that the owners of these stores should try to diminish temptation, as well as to punish thieves.

If every widow had her way there would be no widows.

ATTACHMENT IS SOON WITHDRAWN

In the suit of F. C. Brewster against his nephew J. W. W. Brewster for $5,100 damages, for alleged slander, noted elsewhere, Judge DeBolt yesterday afternoon signed an order granting a writ of attachment against the "money, goods, property and effects" of the defendant, plaintiff complaining that his nephew was about to leave the country. It was said that young Brewster contemplated leaving for the Orient in the Gallic today, and for a little while it looked as if he would be compelled to tarry in Honolulu against his wishes and arrangements.

It being required, however, by a wise law, that folks causing such things as writs of attachment to issue should put up a reasonable bond to indemnify the other party in case of adverse judgment, the condition of things took on a new aspect, for plaintiff, for some reason, could not or would not, or at any rate did not furnish the necessary bond and the writ of attachment was withdrawn.

A MISSING HUSBAND.

As libellee cannot be found within this jurisdiction, Judge DeBolt has signed an order for continuance and for publication of summons in the divorce case of Kate Hottendorf vs. Henry Hottendorf. Libellant does not know the address of her husband and has been trying to ascertain it for the past six months. The matter stands continued for at least twenty days after the last publication of the summons.

Complaint alleges that the woman was deserted in 1894 and that the man has committed adultery in Salt Lake City.

DAVIS SUES NOBREGA

George A. Davis this morning filed suit in assumpsit against Libana de Nobrega, for the amount of $1,000. The complaint sets forth that in the month of May, 1901, the defendant retained the plaintiff as counsel in a certain suit for divorce in which the defendant was libellant and Sylvano de Nobrega, then her husband, was libellee. Plaintiff appeared as counsel for the defendant in the Circuit Court and obtained a decree of divorce of the defendant. The suit was taken by exceptions and an appeal to the Supreme Court, where the plaintiff appeared and argued the suit, finally obtaining a decree for the sum of $5,000 permanent alimony. For these services plaintiff demanded a fee of $1,000 but the defendant refused and neglected to pay and still does so.

The plaintiff prays that the clerk's minutes of the proceedings, the several decrees and opinions of the Supreme Court on file in this suit may be considered part of the complaint and may be given as evidence.

The plaintiff claims the sum of $1,000 and the costs of action and also that the defendant be asked to appear before the court in the January term.

When spoken of in the feminine gender, chicken croquettes should be called cackle-eites.

SAMOAN FISHES

The following relating to poisonous fishes in Samoa was recently submitted to Captain Seabrook, U. S. N., Governor of Tutuila:

United States Naval Station, Tutuila, August 9, 1902.
Captain U. Seabrook, U. S. N., Governor of Tutuila.

Dear Sir:—Permit me to make an informal report on our investigation of the fishes of the Samoan Islands. With the aid of Professors Vernon L. Kellogg and Michitaro Kido, I have spent seven weeks in the examination of the fishes of Samoa, under the direction of the United States Fish Commission, for the information of the President and the Government of the United States.

We have found in Samoa 610 different kinds of fishes, a number not surpassed in any other part of the world, and approached only in Java and Sumatra.

Of this number, about one-half are small fishes living in crevices and pools of coral; some of these never exceed half an inch in length. Of the others, most species are good for food and the bays of Tutuila have an unusually large number of good food-fishes.

Fish are sometimes poisonous in these waters. There are three causes of this:

1. When fish are allowed to lie 4 hours or more, or for a less time in a wet heap, the flesh becomes tainted, and the contents of the stomach soak into the flesh. Tainted fish produce sickness—vomiting and indigestion—a disease called Ichthyosis. In this respect, one kind is as bad as another, and the remedy is to dress fish as soon as possible, and to eat them soon after they have been caught. This disease rarely lasts long, and the best treatment is to produce vomiting.

2. Sometimes fish themselves eat poisonous growths in the sea, thus killing themselves and making their flesh poisonous. There seems to be no such poisonous fish-food in the harbors of Samoa, but it is reported that they sometimes come up from the deep sea after storms.

3. Certain kinds of fish are sometimes or always poisonous on account of a bitter substance called an alkaloid, and somewhat like strychnine, which is developed in the flesh.

These produce a violent nervous attack called Ciguatera, which is sometimes fatal.

The first remedy is to produce vomiting.

More kinds of fish are poisonous in Tutuila than in Upolu.

At Apia, scarcely any kind (except Mumea, Pusi and Sue) is bad.

The principal fishes which may produce Ciguatera are, so far as known, in Tutuila, the following:

1. The Mumea, a large deep red fish with a long body and a large mouth—a kind of Snapper. This is said to be always poisonous.

2. The Taiva Ululu, a smaller kind of Snapper, green in color, with a small black spot on the side of the body.

3. The Filoa, a very long-nosed Snapper, is very often poisonous in Upolu.

4. The Ataata, a kind of Grouper, almost black and covered with small spots of deep blue. This is often poisonous in Tutuila.

5. The Alopa, a lancet-fish, or fish with a sharp knife of bone on the side of the tail, with body covered with bright stripes of blue and orange.

6. The Trigger fishes, called Sumu, are poisonous in some places, but are said to be always safe in Samoa.

7. The File fishes, called Aleva, are regarded as poisonous. They are thin and poor.

8. All the Puffers, or Globe fishes, called Sue, and the Porcupine fish, Ta-utu, are likely to be poisonous—sometimes very poisonous.

9. The Trunk fishes, Moamoa, are said to be always safe in Samoa.

10. The large Sea Eels, or Moraya, called Pusi, are very often poisonous—some of them always so. The fresh

SUGAR BEET SLICING BEGINS.

Salinas, September 10.—Beet-slicing at the big sugar factory here commenced last night. The run will last about seventy-five days, but not to the full capacity of the factory, owing to the refusal of the growers in Pajaro valley, Hollister and San Juan to raise beets at the prices offered by Spreckels. The tonnage will be about one-third that of last year.

Blinks—The new police inspector has been dismissed.
Blinks—What's the trouble?
Blinks—Oh, he used to cultivate fruit trees, and the commissioner decided he must be an expert "grafter."

Fishes That Are Always Good to Eat.

1. All the silvery fishes of the bay or rivers are good. Among these are the Safote, Sali, Anaanahali, Anae, Aua, Afa, Atule, Ula, Malauli Lupo, Ga, Atualo, 'Ava'ava, Ali, Lalafutu, Ise, Tauleia, Gatasami, Malolo, Uisila, Matu, Pasina Umilima. The Uua and Malauli are especially valuable for their excellence, the Atule for its abundance.

There are about 175 species of fishes in the harbor of Pago-Pago large enough for food and perfectly safe to eat.
